Spent the morning packing and at the airline station in Madrid. I thought I would never get my ticket verified and my excess baggage paid for. However, patience was rewarded and we took off promptly on an Air France C-54 at 2:10 p.m. I am loath to leave this wonderful sport, and even more so my generous host, Alan Scaife and our delightful companions. No shooting trip I've ever taken has been so uninterruptedly pleasant and rewarding.

In the four days we bagged 1083 partridges, of which I collected 107.

We had a very fast flight to Paris, arriving there after two hours and fifty minutes in the air. Kay Halle and E. met me at the airport. Kay and Nancy Lancaster have been staying at the house during my absence, but the latter returned yesterday to England.
